Getting to Catch Friday With a Virtual Assistant

-- Whether you are in the USA, Australia or elsewhere, having a Virtual Personal Assistant can change the way you work. Dr Sanders an MD from Texas, and Peter O'Brien from Sydney describe how Virtual Assistants from CatchFriday(dot)com have changed the way they work. –

/24-7PressRelease/ - February 08, 2008 - Dr. Philip Sanders, a medical director from Texas, on an interview talks about how he's been getting by his very busy schedule at the hospital with a virtual assistant.

"I'm used to pressure but frankly," he started, "having a virtual assistant has really worked wonders for me."

He explains that Linda, his virtual assistant, has been his secret weapon so to speak on most of the paper works that he needed to do.

Linda, a virtual assistant specifically assigned to him by CatchFriday(dot)com has taken over the worries from picking a gift for his wife for their anniversary to the preparation of speeches for conventions he's been invited to. She organizes his schedule making sure that nothing is missed or that meetings don't coincide. In short, Linda has really become a part of his life that he simply can't do without. She might be halfway around the world but there seems to be no instance that she's not around for him.

"For the first time in my life I could say I'm looking forward to Friday coming along," says Dr. Sanders. "I used to think 'Oh no! Tomorrow's Friday and I still have a lot of things lined up.' Now, I'm able to look forward to weekends without worrying about everything myself."

Peter O'Brien of Sydney, Australia, shares the same sentiment as Dr. Sanders though they're practically sitting halfway across the world from each other. O'Brien is a CEO in a semiconductor company and is being helped by a virtual assistant aside from his secretary on site.

"You'd really see the difference once you get to have both," he says. "If I'd tell my secretary at 4:55 pm that I needed the report sent to me that evening, she'll definitely widen her eyes in front of me. But Angel, my virtual assistant, would tell me 'Okay. Anything else?' The best part of it is I get to pay a lower rate than the one I got in the office."

O'Brien further narrates that his office secretary is "only" a secretary while his virtual assistant could transform to anything he virtually needed. Tasks could range from "too professional" to "too personal" and still she gets through.

"Friday really changed it's looks when I got Angel to help me out." says O'Brien.
