

Who is Your Virtual Assistant?

You have your lawyer, your trainer, your accountant, your hairdresser, and even your mechanic. Do you have your Virtual Assistant yet?

Charlottetown, PE, Canada, July 02, 2007 --(PR.com)-- Virtual Assistants are the latest team member for your success. If you need someone to keep you on track, provide administrative assistance, bookkeeping, or even just someone to check your emails and phone messages, then you need a VA.

Virtual Assistants complete their work over the internet, telephone, fax, and email. Many clients have never even met their VAs, but they could not live without them. Clients as diverse as actors, coaches, real estate agents, lawyers, and even artists are utilizing VAs. They don't have to hire someone fulltime and so they find it more cost effective. The client's also don't have the overhead costs of operating an office.

Many busy professionals are noticing they cannot do everything themselves. They are finding that they either need to downsize to be able to keep up with their business or outsource. They are starting to outsource many of the duties they once had to do, but weren't doing well. This gives them the time to spend on what they can do, and do it well. Even though Virtual Assistants do come at a cost, it is an investment that many professionals are willing to make.

Darrell Williams, of Right-Hand-Man Virtual Assistant Services, explains, "There are more and more professionals and entrepreneurs that are realizing that they can accomplish more, and therefore make more money, if they can concentrate on what they do best. If they have people partnering with them in their goals, they are more likely to attain them."
